BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF COURSE (100-200 words)
The subject 'Scientific conference/exhibition/performance' aims to prepare doctoral students to actively participate in national and international scientific community events, allowing them to compare scientific research results, discuss research issues and exchange experiences. One of the key elements of a researcher's work, apart from conducting scientific research, is to publish the results of their research, both in the form of articles or monographs, as well as in the form of public presentations at conferences, symposia and scientific congresses among experts, asking and answering questions, and developing a culture of discussion and its characteristics (panel discussion, answering questions about a paper, moderating a conference and its sections). As part of the course, doctoral students will improve, among other things, their presentation skills, their own public speaking skills, and the way they present the results of their own research. At the same time, the content presented by the doctoral student will be subject to broader discussion in order to identify opportunities for initiating scientific debate and conducting a broader scientific discourse related to the discipline of philosophy and the subject of the doctoral student's scientific research, including in a foreign language.
