

Sonia Malvica

Jakub Czopek, PhD, is a lecturer and researcher affiliated with the University of Rzeszów, where he works at the Institute of Polish Studies and Journalism. He graduated in Journalism and Social Communication from the Jagiellonian University and obtained his doctoral degree in Media and Communication Studies from the University of Warsaw with a dissertation devoted to the journal Profile and the intellectual community of Rzeszów.

He gained professional experience at the Polish Press Agency (PAP), the regional daily newspaper Nowiny, as well as in the fields of social communication and public relations. His academic research focuses on transformations of the Polish media system, new media, cyberspace, disinformation, and the impact of artificial intelligence on contemporary journalism. He is the author of numerous publications concerning digital media, fake news, and media education.