

Maria Nicola Buonocore

Maria Nicola Buonocore is a PhD candidate at Comenius University in Bratislava, where she conducts research at the intersection of digitalisation, European integration, and socio-economic transformation. She also served as a Research Fellow at the Interdepartmental Research Centre of the University of Naples “Federico II” (LUPT). Her academic journey includes a Master's degree in International Relations and Scenario Analysis from the University of Naples Federico II, complemented by specialised training in European project planning and management. Maria Nicola has contributed to international research on digitalisation and EU policy challenges and presented at numerous academic seminars across Europe. Her professional experience spans roles such as Junior Information Officer at the Parliamentary Assembly of the Mediterranean and collaborations with Italian policy think tanks. She has participated as project manager and partnership manager in key EU-funded initiatives (Erasmus +, CERV, Horizon) in areas such as digital transformation, multicultural expertise, and resilience in education. Her research interests focus on the societal and economic impacts of digitalisation, with particular attention to Central and Eastern European regions and the processes of Europeanization of public policies.