

Monika Zielińska-Czopek

Dr Monika Zielińska-Czopek is a lecturer at the Institute of Pedagogy, University of Rzeszów. She has gained professional experience both in academia and in educational practice. She has worked in nurseries as an early years teacher and speech therapist, and in a secondary school as a school counsellor. As a result, her research perspective combines theoretical knowledge with practical teaching experience, enabling her to identify and address the real-world challenges faced by educational institutions.

She has also gained valuable international experience in the United States and China, where she participated in classroom observations and conducted her own lessons. These experiences have broadened her research and teaching perspectives, incorporating an international dimension.

Her research interests focus on modern teaching methods, as well as on the processes of shaping and transforming teachers' awareness and professional identity. She is particularly interested in how educational practice can support the development of reflective and open-minded educators, capable of effectively responding to the challenges of a media-saturated society.
